PP500 Unit 8 Reading

Reading Introduction

The concept of leadership and public administration at times refers to the president, congress, and/or state and local officials. Leaders in public administration are directors, community leaders, department liaisons, and much more.

The role of Public Administrators as leaders in the public sector is important to the structure and framework of American government. They are responsible for leading government at all levels, citizens, public organizations, and programs.

In this unit you will read what makes an effective leader in public administration and the challenges of administrative leadership.

Reading Assignment

Course Textbook

- Read Chapter 6: “Chief Executives and the Challenges of Administrative Leadership"

KU Library Readings

This reading is available in the library's article and book collections.

If you need assistance, you can contact the library at 888-595-0010 or library@kaplan.edu

- The article, “Reclaiming Leadership in Public Administration,” focuses on leadership in public administration and why the topic is avoided.

- The article, “Everyone’s a leader in NHS,” explains the theory that everyone is a leader, so you do not need to be the director or executive to become a leader in your organization.